Direct Download.The FCC has withdrawn its proposal to repeal net neutrality, setting up a court battle over the unpopular proposal. "Today we are withdrawing the Notice of Proposed Rulemaking that would have repealed the 2015 Open Internet Order," Chairman Ajit Pai wrote in a statement. "I remain committed to the bipartisan goals of re-classification set forth in the 2015 Order, but the best approach to achieving those goals is to follow the law as written." Pai's move was the FCC's first major reversal since he took control of the commission in January 2017. As FCC Chairman, Pai has maintained the 2015 rules prevented internet providers from blocking or throttling traffic, and that it imposed "onerous burdens" on internet providers. The FCC published its proposal to repeal net neutrality rules in the Federal Register on Wednesday. The proposal must be published in the Federal Register, at which point it is published for 30 days for public comment. The comment period will continue until it expires at the end of the month. The FCC will then vote on whether to repeal the rules. FCC Commissioner Jessica Rosenworcel, a Democrat, said the FCC "has learned nothing" from the public outrage over the proposal. "We've been down this path before," she wrote in a statement. "Repeal passed before the midterm elections in 2017, passed in 2018, passed again before the midterm elections in 2018, and it will pass again." Pai's announcement came just hours after the White House said that President Donald Trump intends to nominate Kansas Secretary of Commerce Stephan D. Johnson as Commissioner of the FCC, replacing Rosenworcel, who will be a recess appointee until Jan. 3, 2019. Johnson's nomination comes after he worked for seven years as the Kansas State Fair's director, and has previously worked for media companies and in the legal field. FCC rules state that Johnson must be appointed by the president, with the approval of the Senate. He will need to be confirmed by the Senate, and if confirmed will take office on Dec. 14, 2018.
