on your desktop. Jerusalem (CNN) -- Israel announced the highest price ever paid for an Arab land claim: $3.8 billion. The government, headed by Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, said that Israelis and Arabs alike would benefit from the settlement of the long-standing dispute. "The international recognition of the settlement of Jerusalem is in Israel's interest, in spite of the Palestinian refusal to advance the process," Netanyahu said at a ceremony to announce the deal. The announcement comes at a time of high tensions between Israel and the Palestinians. Netanyahu had hinted he might make a major announcement about Israel's previously announced plan for a new settlement in the West Bank. The new announcement is the culmination of a long-standing Israeli claim to the eastern half of the city of Jerusalem. A special committee of five Israeli Cabinet ministers recommended the proposal to the government. The committee was headed by Israel's minister of transportation, Yisrael Katz. He said the committee did not recommend the transfer of sovereignty, as some groups have claimed. "We are doing exactly what Israel should do -- using American money to take care of a problem that is very important to the people of

Israel," he said. "We are trading a piece of our territory in order to get the things that we have been requesting and need in peace -- namely, economic development, security and freedom of movement." But some analysts were skeptical about the announcement. "I see this as a declaration of Israeli statehood. It's a recognition of the capital," said Ron Halutz, an expert on Israeli affairs at Hebrew University. "It's true that the other Arabs -- the Palestinians -- and in fact the other countries in the world will reject the move, but Israel will claim that it has changed from a situation of a foreign occupying power to a true state that can make its own decisions." A senior Israeli official told CNN that the group
