You can create a one-key hotkey to be used in conjunction with a mouse click. Once the hotkey is bound to the click, you can simply click the hotkey and be presented with all the target options. This is particularly useful when you have two controllers or when you want to press the same button on the mouse. While there are many great mouse clicking apps out there, iSniping takes a completely different approach. It allows you to use the space bar as a weapon that you can press to perform actions. iSniping takes the coolness factor to the next level. The interface is rather simple, with an image of the target that you want to click on and an option to select a space bar hotkey. Once you click on the hotkey, you can set it to any of the functions that are available. You can select the button/direction you want to use for a given function, and also add or remove a space bar shortcut when the default function is too vague or not specific enough.
