His Roman-Irish novels were set in the late Roman Empire and Dark Ages. He was born and educated in New York.

Culbertson's first novel, The Captive of Montezuma, appeared in 1878, and was followed by other successful historical romances: The Exile of Montezuma (1882), The Church of St. Peter (1883), and The Confessions of Fray Ambrosio (1885). His history, Historical Basis and Tendencies of the Rocky Mountain Fur Company (1888), shows that he was well acquainted with historical fact, and possesses considerable skill in portraying the older social and political conditions of the United States.

His novels are characterized by their romantic interest, individual psychology and realism. They are distinguished by their incidental descriptions of Mexican scenery and life, as well as by their striking and vivid human portraits. Martin Culbertson died at Athlone, Ireland, on December 16, 1911, at the age of sixty-seven.
