Deeply Altered Mind 04-20-2015, 11:44 AM We set up a page for this thread: Field of the Invention This invention relates generally to a material handling system and, more particularly, to a system and method of filling materials onto a shipping pallet from a container. 2. Description of Related Art Conventional liquid container filling and emptying involves the use of the shipping pallet to hold the material to be stored and transferred. The process of filling the pallet with material can be performed with ease if the container is already filled. The actual task of filling the material is difficult if an empty container is to be filled. The process is usually long and tedious and requires the use of auxiliary equipment such as high pressure pumps, pallet loading conveyors and other long continuous lines of piping and chutes. In such cases the pallet must be lifted and moved into position over a material loading area. The material is then loaded into the container. The material is usually pumped from storage containers or trucks. The equipment to load the material onto the pallet is a funnel assembly. This assembly transfers the material from the truck or container to the pallet. The material is allowed to flow from the assembly to the container. The container is then positioned over the funnel assembly and the funnel assembly is raised to pour the material into the container. Once the container is full the container is lowered and the funnel assembly is then lowered to transfer the material to the pallet. Conventional filling equipment has the following disadvantages. First, the funnel assembly is a relatively slow moving conveyor. Therefore, the entire filling process is slowed. Second, the high pressure pumps are expensive. Third, the pumps require air lines as well as electrical cables, normally located in the shipping container, that must be connected to the electrical cables. Fourth, as the container is raised and lowered, the material is allowed to back flow and create a safety hazard for the operator. What is needed is
