in the comments section below!Q: How can I prevent the system from automatically installing updates if I put my laptop in suspend? By default, Ubuntu 16.04 automatically updates itself while it's active. However, if I put my laptop to sleep (by suspending it with the power button), it won't proceed with the update that was initiated when the computer resumed from sleep. Is there a way to stop this behavior? A: This feature is described here, in the section "No automatic updates during sleep/hibernation." This allows you to hibernate or suspend your machine whilst still receiving automatic security updates. Using a security update whilst your machine is in hibernation may cause issues with your hibernation and/or resume process. If this is the case, you should check the Help topic 'Preventing automatic security updates' for more information. Executing the following command shall resolve the issue: `sudo dpkgreconfigure linux-generic-lts-wily` Ask HN: How do you explain what you do? - jasonwilk I think this is the most difficult part for many entrepreneurs who want to sell themselves, many times they feel shy to explain, let alone sell, their value, passion or customer needs.

==== antidoh "I'll explain it with an example:" Say you're sales. You sell a product to customers. You're continually selling the product. Now you're out walking on a street, talking to strangers about your product. You're taking orders. Somebody asks you, "Tell me about your product. What's it about?" Let's say you say, "I
