“We went to FIFA 18 because we knew that we would have needed input from the community,” said David Rutter, head of FIFA, the #1 sports videogame franchise of all time. “Our team knows what the fans want and we know how the opposition plays. Adding creativity and creating moments will be key for us in FIFA 22.” Added producer Ryse Anderson: “What we can do with game mechanics and artificial intelligence, the team can do with understanding the human element. All of our players know each other on an emotional level. We felt it was necessary to mirror that.” In FIFA 22, players will adopt new skills that unlock potential on the pitch. These include looking up when facing the ball, ducking to protect the ball at the feet and balancing how much control you have on the ball to create an aerial challenge. Additionally, the ball will now have physical attributes, something unseen in a FIFA game before now. For example, the ball will not be perfectly spherical, but more of a softer, oblong shape. It won't roll perfectly and bounce erratically, but it will be easier to move and change direction. Specific game mechanics are being developed to open up tactical options on the pitch. The positioning of players, their movement patterns and kicking sequences are all being identified and scaled up to create the most realistic and unpredictable gameplay experience possible. Each gameplay aspect is now being audited for many, many years of development to bring FIFA 22's online play and gameplay features to the next level. "I am so excited about FIFA 22 and the incredible skills you'll see," said Ian Cooper, Lead Multiplayer Gameplay Designer. "We've been looking closely at what competitive players are doing in the real world in front of our eyes. I always felt like players had to do the same things no matter what they were playing. Now, we have new tools to make it feel more like the human challenge, with new physics, timing and control mechanics. And we've also increased the speed and movement of the ball from real-life, which will also add to the challenges in-game." The goal in FIFA 22 is to keep human elements involved in the game. The player is still at the center of the dynamic experience, and moving in real-life will still have an impact on the game. Players will naturally be affected by the changing scenery, and the ball will behave in
