I'm making a Java program that will be used to create JAR files. When I run the GUI versions, I'm able to add URL's to the JAR file. But the way I'm building it, I won't have a GUI. How could I programmatically (either using Runtime.getRuntime().exec() or a CLI-based program) have my jar file accept a URL parameter and add it to it? A: Use the Jar.setURL For example: JarOutputStream out = new JarOutputStream(new FileOutputStream("program.jar")); out.putNextEntry(new JarEntry("com/dave/d.txt")); out.putNextEntry(new JarEntry("d.txt")); //Other stuff out.close(); You can use the constants in JarEntry to get different content. JarOutputStream out = new JarOutputStream(new FileOutputStream("program.jar")); out.putNextEntry(new JarEntry("com/dave/d.txt")); out.putNextEntry(new JarEntry("D:\\Users\\Dave\\some.txt")); //Other stuff out.close(); JarEntry.setURL can accept a URL as well Q: Django - invalid literal for int() with base 10: 'foo' Given the following settings.py file: DATABASES = { 'default': { 'ENGINE': 'django.db.backends.sqlite3', 'NAME': os.path.join(os.path.dirname(__file), 'db.sqlite3') }} os.path.join(os.path.dirname(__file), 'db.sqlite3')

What's new in Flying Angel:

The Castle of Venia, also known as the Palace or Palazzo Leonardo da Vinci is a large stone and brick residence and museum in the city of Vinci, in Italy's Tuscany region. It was built in 1512 with the marriage of Vittoria Colonna di Lamagna and Leonardo da Vinci. The Castle is situated near the Piazza del Duomo and is now a museum of great importance for the study of Leonardo's drawing in the Collegio del Cambio. Description From 1939, Vittoria Colonna di Lamagna (née Marini) took over the administration of the residence and started collecting numerous art works. Such a fact arouses curiosity and criticism among the public, since the presence of so many art works in the house and their scientific values became very evident, as has been documented in the documentation of the Fondo Vinci. This document is divided into two main sections and one supplementary, which were released in 1966: Lecture of Vinci on April 16, 1969. Chapter III, entitled City of Vinci, containing a short history of the building, the collection of paintings, and contributions taken into it. Vittoria Colonna di Lamagna started receiving art works in 1515: Jacopo Tintoretto, the first finished work in 1520 (San Gerolamo, bought as a mobile, and probably never moved from the University, where Tintoretto died in 1594); Giulio Romano, the reconstruction of some rooms in 1527, followed by frescos (Santa Giustina, the Processional Way, and a Filippino Lippi (St Francis is healed by Christ)), among others. The Ducal collection, with more than 500 paintings (the majority of the true originals are now in the museum in Turin and the rest of Milan, among them the "Bois Rosa" by Leonardo and his mother), also includes some painting compositions by Renaissance and Baroque masters. Masterpieces of the Ducal collection: The Prologue of the Ducal collection The palace offered a rich collection in its salon of the Ducal collection. The highlights include, besides paintings by Leonardo da Vinci (most of which are conserved in the Museo di Torino), a narrative of the Virgin composed by Salvi da Castiglioncello in 1512. The Apocalypse of Saint John This is a large painting by Leonardo

Rico-Jump is a one of a kind platform game. There are no jumpscare or other famous e-Sport mechanics present. But there are tons of other interesting mechanics, like the devastating combo-button, you can use to upgrade your robot or gain some extra speed. You can set your own goal (lives), you can also throw balls at other people, using the very unusual mouse-emulation system as input. You can also set the map-size and play in coop and battle-royal-type modes. The bots all have different difficulty, as you can see by the different colors. Above all, you'll have to fight to be the first one on the leaderboard! About the genre: What sets Rico-Jump apart from all other platform-games is that you need to use different techniques to control your robot. This makes Rico-Jump very hard to play the same way everytime. The idea is to simply love it and enjoy it, with some physics-based challenges every now and then. Your robot is a walking machine made out of electric, gears and elastic beams. Depending on your build, the robot has different movement patterns and speed. At the beginning, you can only move on two levels. Later on you'll learn to jump through obstacles and have a lot of new possibilities. What's New: * Some fixes with controls and the game's mechanics. * Improved graphics for certain resolutions. * Improved map editor. * Some other improvements to the main menu. * You can now play against bots on #1, #2 or #3-difficulty.
