In the second movement he incorporates motifs from the famous overture of Handel's Rinaldo, an Italian opera. History This symphony was written in 1761, when Haydn was 38 years old. At the time, he had been in London since 1755. As he later recalled, In its first performance in a London performance on 28 April 1762, the work was never performed again. Scoring and structure This work is scored for 2 oboes, 2 bassoons, 2 horns, and strings. The symphony is in four movements: 1. Vivace 2. Larghetto 3. Allegro 4. Adagio The first movement opens with a tutti theme in for strings, marked Andantino. The movement, in common time, proceeds in sonata form. A soft, melodious theme in A major for strings leads the way to a return to the tutti theme at measure six. The movement ends with a ritornello of the same theme played in different register and time. The second movement is a slow movement in Larghetto, marked Presto. In it, Haydn uses a recurring opening phrase from the first movement to begin the second movement, but the music quickly moves to a Presto tempo before going into the first theme. Finally, a theme with a rhythm from the first movement leads to a variation in
