Microsoft Paint is a simple graphics editor for Windows. It was created to be more intuitive and accessible than similar paint programs. Not all photo editing and graphic design applications are the same and there's a massive range of image editing software available. Below are the top 10 free image editing and graphic design programs. This list has been written using the most accurate and up-to-date information, however, the programs covered here may change over time. Your experience may vary, as programs are updated frequently, and we can't always be sure that we've included the best alternative programs for the job. So, if you don't see your favorite program here, let us know in the comments below. 10. GIMP Image: GIMP | Source: GIMP GIMP (GNU Image Manipulation Program) is the photo editing software many print artists and amateur photographers rely upon. GIMP provides all the tools needed to do graphics editing and offers a plugin system and a bunch of extensions. It's not difficult to learn or use, and that's why so many people find it very useful. GIMP also has a web interface and it's free. GIMP allows you to easily save to and share any image format (it supports more than 100 of them), you can easily edit, organize and resize images, and you can apply and remove effects to your photos. However, GIMP is not perfect. It's not a good tool for web design and it has its own limitations regarding filters and texture maps. 9. Paint.NET Image: Paint.NET | Source: Pixabay Paint.NET is a lightweight, free, open-source alternative to Adobe Photoshop or Corel Paint Shop Pro. It's similar to GIMP and produces a similar result. Paint.NET is a simple and easy-to-use program, which you can use to resize and edit your images in a variety of ways. You can quickly create new document templates, edit and save a number of files at once, and apply filters to your images and then crop or resize them. This program also supports the popular GIMP plugins and offers an extensive library of GIMP-compatible plugins. 8. The long-term objective of this application is to determine the mechanisms of environmental air pollution-induced lung inflammation and fibrosis. The hypothesis of this proposal is that exposures to the diesel exhaust particles (DEP) in urban, multi-city or regional air pollution studies lead to a complex series of events that ultimately results in lung injury and fibrosis. The SPECIFIC AIMS of this proposal are: Aim 1. To determine mechanisms of PMN neutrophil recruitment to the lung following exposures to urban and regional air pollutants. Aim 2. To determine mechanisms of IL-1 β and IL-6 release following exposures to urban and regional air pollutants. Aim 3. To define the induction, activity, and signal transduction mechanisms of IL-8 and MMP-8 release following exposures to urban and regional air pollutants. Aim 4. To determine the mechanisms of fibrosis development and the role of IL-4 β and IL-13 in the development of fibrosis following exposures to urban and regional air pollutants. Development of IL-1 β and IL-6 in the bronchoalveolar lavage (BAL) fluid of rats exposed to DEP was used as an indicator of activation of the innate immune system. Rats were exposed to filtered air (FA) or 2, 3, or 4 mg/m³ DEP for 3 hours, for 5 days/week, 6 weeks. DEP exposures induced significant increases in BAL protein, and a dose response in neutrophilia. DEP was found to be more potent than the quartz particles. Increased levels of IL-1 β and IL-6 were found in BAL fluid of DEP exposed animals. Increased IL-1 β and IL-6 levels were not found in the lungs of animals exposed to other air pollutants or the quartz particles. IL-8 was also measured in BAL fluid. The highest concentration of IL-8 was found in rats exposed to the highest DEP dose for the longest duration. A significant increase in MMP-8 was also found in the BAL fluids of DEP exposed animals. No evidence for IL-8 induction, or MMP-8 activation was found in the lungs of animals exposed to other air pollutants or quartz particles. The higher IL-8 levels following DEP exposures were correlated with severity of the lung injury. IL-4 β and IL-13 are known to activate collagen synthesis and enhance the fibrotic process.
