
you looking for any more information, explanation and help on file types, format, software, usages, etc? Were any of these wrong and/or should I have done any of these differently? I would say no. My favorite games to play on the go are Age of Empires 2 and Civilization 3. That sounds like what you were looking for. I have been learning about file types, how to save them and what applications to use. How can I play to similar file types? Don't know how you arrived at that, but it's not right. You can't just 'play' a DVD. There is no 'playing' a DVD. You open the DVD container, drag the contents you want to copy from it to your storage device, then close it. When I do this I get a message about a keygen I need for the disc. Can you help me with that. There is a conflict here. We are two different people, and I don't know you. With that said, since I don't know you, I don't know your needs, or your circumstances. I don't know anything about you, and if I did, I don't know if it would be helpful to you. I'm not going to tell you what you should or should not do. If that is what you are asking then I would say there is no answer for you. There are however, so many possibilities. When I save a game to any format can I play that game on any other OS, or OS? It's not the same game and not the same level of compatibility. A game from the 1990s? Can I play that on another computer? Not really. That format only holds the game. If you have an original disc you will need to 'play' it on the same device that the disc was originally mounted.

Any other files I can add to make this better or more helpful? My favorite games to play on the go are Age of Empires 2 and Civilization 3. Civilization 3 is extremely old and only works on Windows. A: I understand that, but are there any other files I can add to make this better or more helpful? I don't know that 'better or more helpful' is the objective here. That is the question to ask, not mine. Are you looking for any more information, explanation and help on file types, format, software, usages, etc?
