The purpose of this study was to develop a novel algorithm to calculate the absorbed dose distribution in a water phantom with variable-speed MLC. Dose distributions were calculated for moving fields using both a dose calculation algorithm developed by Vavricka and Nisonoff and the in-house developed algorithm. Both algorithms can be executed in realistic time using only very limited computing resources, and both algorithms were validated against measured data. Absorbed dose distributions were calculated for fields modulated by a Varian TrueBeam® MLC at 50 ms, 1.0 s, 1.5 s, and 2.0 s over a range of MLC speeds (3.6 to 14.8 cm/s). The measured dose distribution was determined by placing a water tank containing ion chambers at the isocenter, and the doses were normalized to the MLC leaves in motion. The absorbed dose distribution calculations agreed well with the measured data. Absorbed dose analysis using the TrueBeam® MLC gave doses within 1% of measured doses at 1.0 s, but d0c515b9f4
