-hour-flight "I know." The two of us sit there in silence for a long time, silently agreeing with each other. We aren't on a date anymore. Just a few days ago, we flew in to Paris together but we didn't. I boarded the flight in San Francisco and she came from Amsterdam two days later. Our aim was to meet up at JFK Airport, but we failed. Or rather, it wasn't quite like that. It was a journey within a journey. There is a reason why it played out like that. We don't need to marry. But we need to get to know each other more. We still need to connect. While we can't really forget the six years that happened between the ages of four and ten, we're still young and we don't need to think about that too much. We could safely stay in the borders of what we have already been through and what we could easily revisit. We could stay stuck in the past but still realise that we are in the present. Something is happening here. So we decided to take it slow. We just need to get to know each other. Just to know that we have a sense of humour when we travel together. We can laugh and make jokes, and they don't come off as stupid. The expectation is still high but much lower. It's yet to get to that point. We both left on business trip on Thursday. She has a serious commitment in her heart, but it's not in her mind. She left for her trip with a promise from me, with a choice. He will help me make a choice. A choice which I have to make before going to business school. She will choose. And then we will get together, and fly somewhere on this earth, and live together somewhere, and bring another person into the world. Before you ask, I have decided. I wake up with a strong feeling. This is my game. I'm going to make it up to her. I've been a shit lately. I'm not doing anything, I see her phone screen all the time, I sent her hundreds of messages I never even answered, I check the social media regularly and promptly I go for a walk with her, even though I still haven't come to terms with the decision to go into business school. I go for a walk and I look straight into the forest. Making decisions sucks. I'm making this decision because I know what I have to do.

WHAT WILL I LEARN? -The basics of driving, including: launch, drift, cornering, braking, and grip -What to look for and what to avoid while driving -How to fuel the car -How to play the Event Director WHAT KIND OF PLAYERS WILL ROOKIE SERIES SUIT? If you're looking for a laidback experience that won't give you the feeling of being in a racing video game, this is the DLC for you. About the Game: DRIFT KING is a casual racing game where you control a drifting car across a city. The game is simple to play, but demanding in terms of physics and performance, allowing players to satisfy their need for speed. The game allows players to get used to driving across town under extreme conditions. The physics model makes the game easy to play but still challenging to master. The game features long-term progression systems such as the map editor and leaderboards. WHY ROOKIE? DRIFT KING was born when the game designer came to an idea to make a racing game that would be fun and accessible. "Are there racing games that are easy to learn and fun to play?" was the question that kept bothering me, and after a few months of coming up with what I thought was the answer, I realized I was wrong. While in the development phase, I was able to spend a lot of time thinking what makes a game fun or a boring experience, and I put those thoughts
