Autocad 2013 64bit Product Activator, Autocad 2013 64bitThis invention relates to an improved container closure and, in particular, to a resealable container closure having a latching member for releasably retaining a cap on the container and a hingeable member whereby the cap and closure may be maintained in a closed position. In the past, resealable container closures have been provided which include an inner liner and an outer shell. The inner liner is typically formed of a low density, thermoplastic resin which provides an easy fitting and tight seal. The outer shell typically includes, for example, a metal foil or a double metal foil which provides a suitable strength as well as a pleasing aesthetic appearance. The two shells are typically assembled to form a resilient, flexible closure. A number of the closures are formed with threading on the container neck and threading on the closure to maintain a tight seal when the cap is secured to the container neck. The threading on the liner and shell extend from the side facing the neck and cap so that, when the cap is screwed onto the container neck, no threading is initially engaged and a wiping action occurs to form the desired seal. In the past, resealable container closures have been provided which include a tamper-evident tab on the closure. The tamper-evident tab is typically provided on the side of the cap which will
