Hepatitis A, B and C are the other common causes of anemia in pregnancy. However, parvovirus B19 is emerging as a possible cause of anemia in pregnancy, especially in underdeveloped countries. To perform a systematic review and meta-analysis to investigate the association between maternal B19 infection in pregnancy and pregnancy outcomes. Eligible studies for inclusion were identified in EMBASE and PubMed from inception to 1 April 2015. The selection of studies followed the standards for comparative effectiveness and reporting (STARE) statement. We included seven studies (seven case-control and one prospective study) in this meta-analysis. The pooled OR for adverse pregnancy outcomes was 1.82 (95% CI: 1.17, 2.84) for preterm delivery, 2.55 (95% CI: 1.16, 5.58) for anemia, and 1.05 (95% CI: 0.98, 1.12) for abortion. The results suggest the association of parvovirus B19 infection with adverse pregnancy outcomes. Further studies are needed in order to confirm these findings and in order to avoid unnecessary screening tests, especially in resource-limited settings.Q:

Laravel eloquent with model attribute that has limit I have a model user. All users have a "first_name" attribute. It's something like a username, so it should be unique. I use laravel eloquent to create and save the data to a database and I also have a select list for the user on the view. The idea is that when the user selects first_name from the list of their names, I do a query with eloquent to retrieve the first_name from the table, so it can be stored in the model attribute of the user. The problem
