diffusion capacity]. A case of pulmonary fibrosis with impaired diffusion capacity (DL), is presented. A 58-year-old woman with a history of dyspnea on exertion for 10 years was admitted to our hospital. A chest X-ray showed bilateral hilar and reticular shadows. There was no fibrosis on her skin or oral mucosa. High-resolution CT demonstrated an ill-defined ground-glass opacities with focal thickening and enlargement of the bronchi. When DL was measured with the single breath method with a linear type lung diffusion monitor, values for alveolar volumes and DL were 1.45 and 36%, respectively. Thus, her DL was classified as reduced diffusion capacity. DL measurements by the single breath method may be useful in patients with pulmonary fibrosis. Study of the large RNA-protein complex formed by the Herpes Simplex Virus-1 major capsid protein. The proteome of the Herpes Simplex Virus-1 (HSV-1) virion is thought to contain more than 80 proteins. In this study, we used a mild and quick procedure to isolate the large capsid complex from HSV-1 infected cells. The purity of the capsid preparation was evaluated by means of SDS-PAGE, electron microscopy and Western blot. The co-purified proteins identified were analysed by MALDI-TOF-MS/MS analysis. It was found that the HSV-1 capsid complex contains the structural proteins gE, gB, gH/gL, gM and gD, as well as the early and late proteins UL20 and UL26. The proteins detected here by mass spectrometry (MS) are in accordance with previous studies, but we also detected a long list of new proteins for further investigation. The expression of most of the detected proteins in cells infected with HSV-1 mutants defective in individual proteins showed that most of these proteins are functionally essential
