The goal of this study is to define the profile of clinical dermatologic conditions treated by General Practitioners, and the characteristics of these consultations in the study area, Galicia (NW Spain). This is a cross-sectional descriptive study of a survey of the clinical histories of patients who visited the study's general practitioners over a period of 12 months. A total of 777 patients were studied: 41.6% had dermatologic problems, with a mean age of 39.5 +/- 18.5 years. However, only 40% had skin problems associated with other systemic pathologies. The most common skin conditions were dermatitis, inflammation of the nails, eczema, and dermatophytosis. The most common general skin conditions were psoriasis (6.2%), basal cell carcinoma (3.7%), and warts (2.7%). In addition, an average of 23.6 patients per doctor consulted for skin conditions and the most common dermatologic problem was viral exanthema. The most common skin conditions in Galicia, and the most frequent dermatoses treated by General Practitioners in Galicia, are common conditions. It is important to remark the existence of a heterogeneous profile of age and skin condition among the patients seen, with no preference for any age group, which suggests the need for a differentiated approach in the dermatologic care received by these patients.Q:
