Soluene to soon start laying its first cable on the bottom of the Sea Soluene, a French company that has been organizing diving expeditions since the 1960's, says it will soon start laying its first submarine cable on the bottom of the Mediterranean Sea. According to Agence France Presse the 27 kilometer long cable will reach Tunis and connect the Blue Mountains in the Mediterranean to the shore of France in Calais. A second cable along the same line is being planned. Soluene to soon start laying its first cable on the bottom of the Sea According to Soluene, the submarine cables are made of glass fibres, allowing them to withstand the high pressure and temperatures of the water. A high speed data transmission rate of 40 gigabits per second is being used for data transfer of pictures, videos and songs. The cables are equipped with an aerial that remains in place at the bottom of the sea and an anchor at the shore end. Soluene says that the first cable was laid in 2012. "The cables have already carried data for two years without a single interruption," according to the company. The project will cost €250 million, with €100 million of the financing already being provided by the European Investment Bank, €45 million coming from the French Agency for Development Finance and Foreign Trade (AFD), and €25 million from the French Development Agency. Soluene is also planning to lay another cable to link Italy's Corsica Island with a subsea terminal on the coast of the French Riviera. The company has organized more than 10,000 global adventure dives for blue marlin, manta rays, sharks, dolphins, octopuses and many other animals.North Korea Asked Why It Should Get Credit for the Denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula On Sunday, at a meeting of national officials in Pyongyang, North Korea's Foreign
