An immuno-electron microscopic study. The distribution of the FITC-Tf was studied in the mucosa of human lungs, after i.v. injection of the tracer. Excretion of the label was also evaluated in the urine. In control samples, the tracer was present in plasma and most of the surface epithelial cells (S-EC) of both bronchi and trachea. In the alveolar epithelium, the fraction of the tracer associated with type II S-EC was increased 10-20-fold compared to plasma. This may be due to a specific transfer across the alveolar capillary barrier. In the bronchi, the fraction of the tracer present in S-EC was elevated 10-20-fold over plasma. The epithelial cells of the bronchus contained large amounts of the tracer. Staining for iron in control lung sections showed that the alveolar and bronchial epithelium were negative. The most striking difference between control and FITC-Tf administered lungs was the presence of iron particles in the S-EC and a concentration of FITC-Tf in the luminal plasma of the bronchi. The tracer was found in the endolysosomal system, mainly in dilated tubulo-vesicular structures. In trachea control samples, FITC-Tf was localized in the basal and S-EC whereas this tracer c6a93da74d
